The Best Bars In Nomad

By Bryan Kim and Matt Tervooren

In most neighborhoods, you know what kind of bars to expect. On the Lower East Side, for example, there are plenty of places where you can grab cheap drinks with people who are only a few months out of college. And, in the West Village, there are a lot of wine bars that perfect for first dates that probably won't go well. But Nomad is a little different. It's a relatively small neighborhood - and the bars are all over the place. There's a speakeasy behind a coffee shop, a dive bar with TVs and barbecue, a place that looks like an old Irish castle, and a bunch of other spots for all sort of situations. To find the one that's right for you, check the list below.

The roof at Park South is the sort of place where you drink with some friends or coworkers once the weather gets nice and you want to drink above street level without having to deal with a dress code or multiple bachelor parties. They serve a bunch of food, and there also happens to be a fireplace - which doesn't make sense because this rooftop's only open in the spring and summer. Keep an eye on the forecast, and be the first one up.
